Bisous Limoux introduces international readers to life in the Aude

The online magazine explores Limoux and the Haute Vallée through local people, food, wine and culture.

LIMOUX, FRANCE — Bisous Limoux is introducing readers to a corner of southern France through the stories of its winegrowers, food producers, cafés, markets and local traditions.

The English and French magazine focuses on Limoux, the Haute Vallée de l'Aude and the surrounding Aude, within the wider Languedoc-Roussillon area of today's Occitanie. It is edited by William Hopkins and forms part of The Limoux Collection.

The editorial approach brings together the subjects that give a place its character: the people who live and work there, the food they make, the wines they grow and the landscape around them. Limoux's Blanquette and Crémant provide one introduction to the area, alongside its carnival, town life and the countryside of the upper Aude valley.

Bisous Limoux is intended both for people planning a visit and for readers who enjoy following regional French life from abroad. Its audience development campaign is approaching Francophile communities, food and wine networks, cultural organisations, travel writers and creators in the United States, Ireland, Belgium, the Netherlands and Canada.

The magazine welcomes enquiries from contributors with a local story, community organisations interested in sharing relevant editorial, and businesses interested in discussing advertising or clearly identified commercial partnerships.
